PORKY PIG

SLEIGHT OF HAND

"Well, well, well, if it isn't my old pal, Elmer! And just back from a shopping expedition, I see!" chuckled Bugs Bunny one day, pointing to the cumbersome load of boxes Elmer was trying to balance as he was heading for his front door.

"Quite wight!" agreed Elmer, pushing the door open with one foot. "I have just purchased a costume for my appearance with the Bungling Brothers' Circus!" he replied proudly, as he removed the lid from the gaily-striped hat box that topped the pile of boxes. "I'm to give a special benefit performance every night this week while the circus is in town," he added in explanation and popped an enormous top hat on his head. "I'm to be a magician!"

"Say!" exclaimed Bugs in surprise. "That sounds very interesting! Now, if you could manage to get me a couple of passes for tonight's performance —"

"Absolutely not!" exploded Elmer with such violence that the top hat slid far down over his nose. "This is to be a benefit performance, and no mooching bunny rabbits will be admitted!"

"A fine friend you are," grumbled Bugs. "It doesn't sound like a show that will benefit me any," he went on. Then suddenly he burst into a wide grin, as a conniving twinkle began to gleam in his eyes. "Oh well," he chortled, "there are more ways than one to skin a — er — to get into a circus tent! I think I can manage without a free pass, after all!"

"Oh no, you won't!" declared Elmer pompously, waving his top hat dramatically to and fro. "If you show up for my performance without buying a ticket, I'll — I'll eat this hat!"

"Hmm," mused Bugs with a calculating wiggle of his ears, as he regarded the top hat, which Elmer was returning to its box. "Sounds fair enough, Doc! It's a bet!"

"A bet, indeed!" sniffed Elmer haughtily, as he headed for the next room. "This is getting wicidulous — and besides, I must pwactice my magic twicks, before this evening's show. I twust," he added with hardly a backward glance, "that you know the way to the fwont door!"

"Sure thing!" replied Bugs, undaunted. "See you at the circus!"

When Elmer had finished practicing, he returned to the room, gathered up the boxes containing his magician's costume and headed toward the circus grounds.

"My but these boxes seem heavy," he puffed as he set them down in his dressing room. "I wonder if that wabbit ." he mused and then peered cautiously into the boxes, half expecting to see Bugs come popping out of one of them. When nothing happened, he smiled confidently and dressed for the performance, sure that he had outwitted his pesky acquaintance.

Once out in the circus ring, however, Elmer was startled to feel his top hat pop right off his head and to see Bugs' head poking out of it with a roguish grin!

"You wascally wabbit!" growled Elmer while the audience burst into delighted applause. "How did you get in my hat?"

"Come, come, Doc!" cajoled Bugs with a wink. "Don't tell me you didn't plan the trick of pulling a rabbit out of your hat! The only difference this way is that the rabbit is pulling the hat trick on you!"
